

How Schools Benefit by Participating in KCTC Student Survey

www.kctcdata.org

- The KCTC provides a way for schools to monitor important aspects of youth attitude and behavior at no cost.
- Data is used to apply for or evaluate grant funding – funding that directly and indirectly benefits students.
- Starting in 2017, participating districts with stable participation rates will be provided with a Social-Emotional Learning data report. The report can be used as a universal screening to identify a district's strengths and challenges to help improve youth SEL and meet new accreditation requirements.
- School administration receive their own district data report each year and have online access to a password protected website to view data at any time.
- Many schools use the KCTC to develop a school profile and strategic plan, using data to identify areas of need and determine what is working and what needs improvement.
- It is the only survey that provides consistent and reliable data for local level (school district and school building) and broader community planning.
- By administering the survey every year, administrators can track trends occurring time.
- The survey measures not only risk factors, but also protective factors – positive trends or attributes within a building, grade, district, or county.
- If problem behaviors decrease in schools and communities, they are better places to learn, grow, and live. KCTC can help measure those changes.
